Scoring The Children's Dissociative Experiences Scale and Post-Traumatic Stress Index

There are four versions of this instrument. One for white males, one for African-American males, one for white females, and one for African-American females. The questions on the different versions are the same, the only difference is the names used in the items. I have reprinted the version developed for white females. For other versions, write to the author Bradley Stolbach at bstolbach@larabida.org.

To compute the total score, combine the CDES & CPTSI scores (i.e., the total of all responses except items 20, 28, & 36). A total score of 43 was the cutoff for Definite PTSD derived in the original study, and subsequent research and clinical use of the measure suggests that this is a valid cut point. Totals in the mid-30's appear to be related to substantial subthreshold PTSD symptoms or "partial PTSD".

The CDES and PTSI have not been shown to function as separate subscales. In general, however, if a child averages more than 1 per item (i.e., CDES > 21 or PTSI > 13), the child is likely experiencing clinical levels of symptoms in that area. A Fake score of 5 or higher should raise concerns and a 7 or higher suggests that the responses are not valid and that the child is likely to under-report symptoms in response to other measures or clinical interview. For more information see the scoring sheet below.

Social Desirability (Fake) Score > 4 suggests possibility of underreporting; > 6 suggests responses are not valid.

Total Score = Dissociative Experiences Score + Posttraumatic Symptom Score (Do not include Fake items in Total Score).

Total Scores > 34 suggest clinical level of trauma symptoms/partial PTSD.

Total Scores > 42 suggest PTSD.

The CDES/PTSI is intended as a screening measure and diagnoses should not be made based solely upon CDES/PTSI scores.
